Each of the new animations are derived from the movements of the 22 players taking part in EA's latest FIFA competition. The resulting animations are beautifully rendered, using the same animation models (called MocapTracks) that have powered the play of EA's real-life footballers from the past, giving us the clean animations that have so impressed football fans around the world. Overall, the new animations have been enhanced to feel more responsive and natural on PlayStation 4 and Xbox One. This is further supported by the increase in complexity and depth of animations across all levels of game play, including footballers sprinting forward, diving for the ball, making sliding tackles, and cornering the ball. The added realism of the new animations help players better make decisions on where to be in relation to opponents and teammates, whether it's to run with the ball, kick it or hold it tight and more. The ball is also able to be controlled more naturally thanks to the inclusion of new physics updates in FIFA 22 that result in the ball feeling lighter and bouncier in the air. New Running Mechanics A number of FIFA players have pointed out that running is one of the most important elements of the game and yet the players still run like crazy and jump without taking into account the ground. Luckily, the powers of FIFA 22 have arrived to make running look more natural and to prevent players from flopping over the ball and falling as they attempt to pass and cross. Each player naturally makes their way into the offensive phase of play in a way that matches their style of play. For example, a player will naturally roll towards the ball, stepping on it with their right foot and leading with their left. This is replicated at the player's running speed, with less jumps than in previous games. Players will be able to see the difference. One of the major points of criticism surrounding the look of running in FIFA 22 is a new sprint animation, which looks less jacked up than previous iterations. This was done with the intention of creating a smoother animation. It is still a running animation though, and it still feels a lot more jacked up than any of the other running animations. There are still no slide tackles. A slide tackle is an agility tackle that is performed while you slide at the ground with your upper body, to get past a defender, and it is an advanced
